Greetings, Mr. Mark Goldman.

Regarding provisional passports, we would like to inform about the entry of travelers carrying a Travel Document in Lieu of National Passport. It is important to emphasize that although this document is issued to enable travel, its temporary nature indicates that it should be replaced by a regular passport as soon as possible.

The use of a regular passport is essential to avoid potential complications during immigration in foreign countries, including Brazil. Regular passports are internationally recognized and are considered the official travel document for most countries. Regarding the acceptance of such documents by European Union countries, please note that the Federative Republic of Brazil is not a member of this group and hence is not obliged to comply with their regulations, given our sovereignty.

Therefore, although the Travel Document in Lieu of National Passport has been accepted by migration officers at airports in Brazil, we recommend travelers to arrange for the replacement of the temporary Israeli travel document with a regular passport before travelling. This will ensure a smoother travel experience, facilitating the entry into other countries, including Brazil, and avoiding possible inconveniences or delays in immigration processes.

Atenciosamente/Best regards,
